EXPLANATIONS

The title of a book given in brackets indicates that it is the original source of publication of a story which is indexed from a collection—the author's complete works not being indexed.

The order of references as given under the author entry is as follows:

1. Author's collected works
2. Author's separate works
3. Composite collections
4. Magazines

The list of books in Appendix A should be consulted to ascertain what editions have been indexed. Different editions of an author's works bearing the same title do not always contain the same stories.

In foreign names variations in spelling often occur. The Library of Congress spelling has been followed wherever possible but under "Contents" entries in "Appendix A. Collections," the spelling given by the editors is retained. This should cause no confusion as cross references are made from the variants in the main index.

This Supplement contains not only stories written since the publication of the Second Edition of the Index to Short Stories and the First Supplement, but many stories by older authors not previously indexed. Entries from the earlier editions are not repeated in the Supplement, but when titles of stories indexed in the earlier editions reappear in new collections these are entered thus giving additional sources of information as to where the stories may be found. It will therefore be necessary to use the Second Edition and both Supplements in order to locate all reprints of the stories.

PREFACE

Before writing this introduction the editor has just re-read her preface to the Index to Short Stories: First Supplement, and she finds that practically everything stated therein applies also to this Second Supplement. However as it is too much to expect that users of her indexes will go back to read again the explanations offered in earlier volumes, some of the information previously given is repeated here.

The arrangement followed in this volume is the same as that employed in the First Supplement, and very nearly the same as that used in the First and Second Editions, namely: the author, title and subject entries are listed in one alphabet; full information as to where the stories may be found is given under the author entry. Author and subject entries are indicated by bold-faced type. Under the author's name the stories are listed alphabetically by title; under every title the various places in which the story may be found are entered in the following order:

1. Complete works of the author.
2. Individual volumes of the author's works.
3. Composite collections of stories.
4. Periodical references.

Source references which appear in the earlier volumes have not been repeated but old titles which reappear in later collections have been included. It will therefore be necessary to use both the Second Edition and the First Supplement as well as the Second Supplement to make sure that all available sources have been found. When a source reference under an author entry is enclosed in brackets it means that the story may be found in that volume of the author's works but that the volume has not been indexed; this often occurs when a chapter or an excerpt from a novel has been reprinted in some collection as a short story; sometimes it occurs when a story is by an author whose complete works have not been indexed but examples of whose work are included in indexed composite collections.

Stories from 2062 authors have been indexed and 9630 titles have been listed.

There is some overlapping in dates in the three volumes. It often happens that a writer whose work was not indexed in the earlier volumes, has in recent years become of sufficient importance to warrant the inclusion of his work in the present volume. When that occurs the early work as well as the more recent has been indexed. It should also be borne in mind that the stories in the supplements are not necessarily new material although the collections in which they appear have not previously been indexed. While compiling this supplement it has been a constant surprise to the editor to find how many editors of volumes of short stories continue to include those that have been reprinted many times. This may be a waste from the point of view of large libraries but it has the indisputable advantage for the small library that the latter may be reasonably sure of possessing at least one collection in which a time-honored story may be found.

In preparing this bibliography the editor has been impressed by two facts; first, that since 1929 when the First Supplement was issued, there has been a distinct falling off in the number of published collections of short stories by individual authors, and second, that there is an increasing number of composite collections now being published. In the First Supplement the proportion of composite collections to collections by individual authors was about 1 to 8; in the Second Supplement the proportion is approximately 1 to 3. The explanation of this would probably be found to be a commercial one but the discussion of the phenomenon is not relevant to my work; the fact is registered as users of the Index might otherwise question an apparent disproportion in the two classes of collections included. 366 volumes of stories by individual authors, and 124 composite collections have been indexed in this supplement.

The general rule heretofore followed of indexing the complete work of an author only if at least one volume of his collected stories had been published is still the principle which forms the basis of selection of authors to be indexed but there are some departures from the rule in this Supplement. If before 1929 a short story writer of merit or popularity had published a collection of his short stories, that volume and all stories of his published in magazines for which data was available were indexed; if since that date no new volume of his collected stories has been issued but many stories have appeared in magazines it has seemed inadvisable to continue indexing the latter as the stories may readily be located through the Readers' Guide. If at some later date the stories are collected and published in book form, the complete indexing will be resumed. If on the other hand but a few stories by an author of importance have been indexed in the Guide, they have been included in the Supplement. In one or two instances the magazine stories of a contemporary writer whose work in other fields is of current interest have been indexed in order that anyone interested in a complete survey of his work may readily find the stories.

The demand for more subject entries in both the Index to Short Stories and the Index to Plays is unabated. The editor fully understands the client's difficulty but she still feels what she has explained so many times before that the benefit derived from such entries would not justify the work involved in compiling them. The problem to her mind is practically an unsolvable one. No mere list of stories on a given subject meets the need; titles may fill the reader with hope but from titles nothing can be learned of the suitability of stories for a particular occasion or for a special group of people. The story that might be accepted by one teacher or reader would be rejected by another as not meeting the requirements of his community or class. The reader constantly wants a new story for Christmas or Washington's Birthday; an old one no matter how appropriate cannot be presented to the same audience many times and new and appropriate occasional stories simply do not exist in large or even in appreciable numbers. It is the editor's belief that in the last analysis the solution of the problem will always be conditioned, not by the published material, but by the material available in any particular library. This presents a project for any librarian in a small library or for a reference librarian in a large one, to work out for her clientele.
